

Research Update:

Milli Re Turkiye National Scale Rating Raised To 'trBBB+' From 'trBBB-'

September 2, 2024

Overview

- Milli Reasurans T.A.S (Milli Re) has maintained its market position and capital adequacy despite being exposed to high inflation and foreign exchange risks.
- We consider Milli Re to be a moderately strategic important subsidiary to its parent, IsBank (not rated), and we think the parent has capacity to provide financial support to Milli Re, if needed.
- We therefore raised our Turkiye national scale rating on Milli Re to 'trBBB+' from 'trBBB-'.

Rating Action

On Sept. 2, 2024, S&P Global Ratings raised to 'trBBB+' from 'trBBB-' its Turkiye national scale rating on Milli Reasurans T.A.S. (Milli Re).

Rationale

We consider Milli Re as moderately strategic important to its parent, IsBank (not rated). Isbank is one of the largest commercial banks in Turkiye and owns an 87.6% stake in Milli Re. We think IsBank has capacity to provide financial support to Milli Re, if needed.

Milli Re's status as Turkiye's leading national reinsurer is a key rating strength. We expect the experienced management team will sustain the company's market position. Although Milli Re's premium generation is still concentrated in Turkiye, its international division provides some geographic and business line diversification.

We anticipate that Milli Re will maintain its positive net income, despite weak underwriting performance. High inflation, the weakening Turkish lira (TRY), and exposure to natural catastrophe losses have depressed Milli Re's underwriting performance, such that net combined ratios often exceed 100%. (Lower combined ratios indicate better profitability. A combined ratio of greater than 100% signifies an underwriting loss.) This is offset by the company's high investment income, supported by high interest rates and the revaluation of invested assets and affiliates.

Research Update: Milli Re Türkiye National Scale Rating Raised To 'trBBB+' From 'trBBB-'

Thus, on a net income basis, Milli Re has consistently reported positive net income over the past five years and we expect this to continue for the next two years.

Our forecasts indicate that capital adequacy and liquidity are likely to remain at the current levels for the next two years. Türkiye's rampant inflation and the weakness of the lira have created additional insurance liability reserves on Milli Re's balance sheet. In addition, the earthquakes on Feb. 6, made 2023 an exceptionally bad year for Turkish insurers, in terms of losses. Nevertheless, Milli Re improved its shareholders' equity for the year on an absolute basis, as well as its capital adequacy, measured according to our models. We consider that the company has adequate retrocession protection, backed by highly rated international reinsurers. This covered most of the earthquake claims. Therefore, we expect that Milli Re's capital adequacy will remain above the 99.50% level in 2024-2026, measured using our risk-based capital model.

Milli Re's concentration of investments in Türkiye heightens risk exposure. The company holds most of its investments in local financial institutions, the credit quality of which is predominantly 'BB+' or below. As a result, the average asset quality of its portfolio is low. In addition, while Milli Re's management aims to manage foreign-exchange volatility risk by holding some long positions in foreign currency-denominated assets that match its liabilities, the rampant depreciation of the lira in recent years continues to affect underwriting performance. Foreign-exchange risks remain high.
